The Yolo County Probation Department and the Woodland Coalition for Youth are seeking high school students to apply for one of two vacancies on the County's Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention Commission.

All students, especially those who wish to pursue a career in law, criminal justice or social services are encouraged to apply. Information about the Commission, including the application to become a commissioner, can be found at www.woodlandyouth.org/thingstodo. Commissioners are formally appointed by the Yolo County Board of Supervisors and as such are expected to serve from one to four years.

According to the Yolo County web site, the mission of the Juvenile Justice/Delinquency Prevention Commission is "(t)o inquire into the administration of juvenile court law in Yolo County and to assist in the effort toward prevention and reduction of juvenile delinquency, as required by law."
